Emanuel accepts chief of staff job

Obama's pick of fiery Democrat represents a shift in tone

Associated Press

Barack Obama is making his chief of staff selection official.

The president-elect said in a statement Thursday that fellow Chicagoan Rahm Emanuel has accepted the job of White House chief of staff.

Obama said "no one I know is better at getting things done" than the Illinois congressman.

Emanuel said the job is a privilege and he is humbled by the responsibility. He said he is leaving his job in House leadership to do everything he can to "help deliver the change America needs."

The selection of the fiery Democrat marked a shift in tone for Obama, who chose more low-key leadership for his presidential campaign.

Emanuel, who served as a political and policy aide in the Clinton White House before running for Congress, weighed the family and political considerations before accepting.

As word of Emanuel's acceptance spread

HEADING TO THE WHITE HOUSE

Barack and Michelle Obama will visit the White House on Monday at President Bush's invitation. "Michelle and I look forward to meeting with President Bush and the first lady on Monday to begin the process of a smooth, effective transition," Obama said in a statement. "I thank him for reaching out in the spirit of bipartisanship that will be required to meet the many challenges we face as a nation." On the discussion list for the president and president-elect: the financial crisis, the war in Iraq and the future of the country. AP

Thursday, Obama was meeting privately in Chicago with U.S. intelligence officials preparing him to be commander in chief and transition team leaders tasked with building his entire administration in 10 short weeks.

The president-elect planned his first public appearances since his victory for Friday.

Aides said he will meet with economic advisers to discuss the nation's financial woes—Americans listed the economy as their top concern on Election Day—and then talk to the news media.

Obama advisers said he was selecting the leaders of the new government with a sense of care over speed, with no plans to announce Cabinet positions this week.

Aside from Emanuel, several Obama aides said other White House officials were being lined up, including Robert Gibbs as the likely pick for press secretary. Gibbs has been Obama's longtime spokesman and confidant and was at Obama's side from his 2004 Senate campaign through the long days on the presidential campaign trail.

Obama planned to stay home through the weekend, with a blackout on news announcements so that he and his staff can get some rest after a grueling campaign and the rush of their win Tuesday. He is planning a trip to Hawaii in December to get away with his family before their move to the White House—and to honor his grandmother, who died Sunday there.

Obama began Thursday as he usually does, with a workout. Later, he planned to visit with the transition team he officially announced Wednesday but had been under way for weeks.

He also spent time at the FBI office in Chicago, a secure location for him to receive his first president's daily brief. The document is mostly written by the C.I.A. and includes the most critical overnight intelligence. It is accompanied by a briefing from top intelligence officials that typically lasts 45 minutes to an hour, although Obama's first is expected to be longer.

Emanuel combines experience, attitude

Associated Press

CHICAGO Rahm Emanuel combines political instincts, White House experience and a Chicago tough-guy attitude—traits that he's likely to need as President-elect Barack Obama's new chief of staff.

His combative style as political director in the early days of the Clinton administration earned him the nickname "Rahmbo." He didn't always produce results, though. Emanuel lost that job but stayed on as a senior adviser and oversaw some of Clinton's top initiatives, including NAFTA and an assault-weapons ban.

After a stint in banking, Emanuel was elected to Congress in 2002 and became a major power. He wound up overseeing the party's House election efforts in '06 and won a majority for Democrats through tireless fundraising and candidate recruitment.

Emanuel's fundraising skills are credited with helping keep Bill Clinton's campaign afloat during some rocky times, particularly the scandal over whether he slept with Gennifer Flowers.

In 1999, Emanuel left the White House for Chicago to work in investment banking. The firm he joined was soon sold and Emanuel made millions, giving him the financial security to get back into politics.

AS SEEN ON TV

Rahm Emanuel grew up in Wilmette, the son of an Israeli doctor who moved to the U.S. His brother Ari is a Hollywood agent and the inspiration for Ari Gold, the Type-A superagent on HBO's "Entourage." The congressman himself has been cited as an inspiration for presidential aide Josh Lyman on "The West Wing." AP

My historic night— sitting on a couch

Years from now, when my children ask me where I was when Barack Obama was elected president of the U.S., I’ll have no problem recalling that historic moment.

Boys, I’ll tell them, at the moment our country took an incredible step forward, I was sitting on our couch eating a bowl of Honeycombs.

Yes, not going to the rally at Grant Park will easily go down as one of the dumbest decisions I’ve ever made—and not because I also had Cocoa Pebbles in the cupboard.

But before really getting into how shortsighted I was, let me explain why I chose an evening at home over a night on Chicago’s lakefront, watching history unfold.

1. I’m addicted to CNN.

Make fun of the Jessica Yellin “hologram” all you want, but I couldn’t imagine an election night without the robotic reporting of Wolf Blitzer, the low tones of David Gergen or the wry smirk of Gloria Borger.

Nearly two years into this relationship, which became really passionate over the last two months, it just didn’t seem right to abandon them. I wouldn’t want Jeffrey Toobin mad at me.

2. Nobody knew when Obama would speak

The last time a presidential election ended the night of the actual election was 1996, so I can hardly be blamed for looking past Obama’s huge lead in the polls and thinking we’d have another cliffhanger.

Not even when something like 150 polls in a row had gone in Obama’s favor and John McCain and Sarah Palin had embarrassing reports of infighting coming out of their respective camps.

No, never saw it coming.

3. I had to be at work at 8 a.m. the next day

So can you tell I’m older than 40?

OK, this is the part of the column where I start the hand-wringing.

First of all, picking a TV show, which it basically was for me, over an actual event is grounds for dismissal as a human being.

And making decisions based on unanswered questions, like when Obama would speak, or when I’d be able to get to bed, is just sad.

Hey, I once camped out overnight outside a London TV studio just so I could be in the audience during a taping of “The Late Show with David Letterman.” I have a history of being willing to sacrifice for the right event.

So how on Earth could I have been so dense? I honestly don’t know what I was thinking.

It wasn’t until the morning after the election, when my wife asked me if I wish I had gone, that it started to hit me.

And then when I got to work and started hearing from co-workers who walked over, and I started looking at the photo galleries and watching more video of the evening did I realize it was a huge mistake not to go.

Ah, well. I’ll go next time.

Camelot revisited

Associated Press

It was a mere fleeting image amid all the others that were beamed into our living rooms on that momentous election night: 7-year-old Sasha Obama in her black party dress, bounding gleefully up into her father's arms, each in turn planting a happy kiss on the other's cheek.

But the heart-tugging moment was as poignant a reminder as any that a vigorous, appealing young family is entering the White House—one that will bring a dramatically different energy and style to the presidency.

What will mark the style of an early Obama White House? Friends of the new first couple say the mansion will be infused with the spirit of Sasha and her 10-year-old sister, Malia, just as the Kennedy White House is often remembered as a playground for Caroline with her pony, Macaroni, or John Jr., who liked to hide in the Oval Office desk.

"He may be the president-elect, but those two young daughters will still be a major focus of his life, and a major part of the White House," says Kirk Dillard, a Republican state senator from Illinois and a friend of Obama's. "Barack is a pretty hip and engaged father, and those girls have him wrapped around their little fingers."

The White House staff will be grateful for their presence, says Betty Monkman, a former chief White House curator who worked there for 30 years.

"Any house is so much more alive with children, and it's the same with the White House," says Monkman.

Will Michelle Obama and her husband be enthusiastic White House hosts, holding grand dinners a la Jackie Kennedy? Friends aren't sure. "They're pretty relaxed and casual types," says Sandy Matthews, a close friend from Chicago.

Barack Obama's daughters, Malia, 10, and Sasha, 7, run to greet him Saturday in Pueblo, Colo.

America's new family

Much awaits Obama's young daughters at White House

Chicago Tribune

The American Girl catalog couldn't write a story more compelling than the Obama family's upcoming adventure.

The Obama sisters will face dramatic changes when they become the youngest White House inhabitants since Amy Carter. In the time it takes for President-elect Barack Obama to be sworn in, they'll be transformed from Hyde Park girls into American princesses.

"Their lives are not going to be normal," said historian Sandra Musgrove, who has written books about first children. "It's not normal to be a president's child. When your father is the president, you're royalty in this country."

Future First Lady Michelle Obama has described her upcoming role as "Mommy-in-Chief" to emphasize that the girls will be her top priority while living in the White House. Many also expect their maternal grandmother, who helped care for them during the campaign, to have a regular presence at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

"If Barack is in the White House or in our house, the girls are going to be the center of our universe," Michelle Obama said before the election.

"We're going to make sure they're protected and that they have some level of normalcy."

For Malia, 10, and Sasha, 7, that probably means they'll be expected to follow the current Obama household rules such as making their beds, setting their own alarm clocks and adhering to a strict 8 p.m. bedtime. It's unclear whether they'll get a raise in their $1-a-week allowance.

Once in Washington, the girls are expected to maintain their current slate of extracurricular activities, which include weekly

Obama baby boom

Yes, we did. The term "Obama Baby" has joined the English language amid speculation that Tuesday's crowds of emotionally charged voters probably went home and got it on.

The Urban Dictionary Web site now offers the definition:

"1. Obama Baby. A child conceived after Obama was proclaimed President by way of celebratory sex ... I was born July 2009. I'm an Obama baby!"

A series of social-networking inquiries by the Tribune (Q: Did you?) yielded anecdotal support. Subjects were granted anonymity for obvious reasons.

Yes, said a Chicago media research director. Hope and beer fueled her decision. Yes, said a married woman in Georgia. Almost, said a woman in Indianapolis (late returns left her too tired). One man in Milwaukee said he and his wife made love on the floor, her idea. "Yes We Can!" the man added.

"Being in a thrilling situation, whether it's one of fear or one of joy—either way—tends to draw people together," explained Beverly Palmer, a California State University psychology professor. "You sort of reach for each other in those kinds of situations."

Political operatives have long waxed about we-may-never-meet-again sex in campaigns fueled by high emotions, late nights and close working conditions.

But leave it to Barack Obama to spread the wealth to the voters.

TRIBUNE

Presidential luxuries

The White House comes with an executive chef, a cooking and wait staff, and a full-blown medical unit staffed with Navy doctors. The unit conforms to the needs of the family, so a pediatrician can be added.

The Government Accountability Office handles matters like lining up plumbers, electricians and other fix-it folks.

Dry cleaning? A personal valet makes those arrangements for the president. The first lady's staff will see to it for the rest of the family.

Moving into the White House

The Washington Post

The moving trucks show up when the country's attention is distracted, focused on the pomp of Inauguration Day.

In splendid synchronization, one set of trucks rolls onto the White House grounds at precisely noon, another set rolls out—with the move all done quietly and blindingly fast in the few hours it takes to do the swearing-in of a new president and the traditional after-luncheon.

Bushes out of 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. Obamas in: Barack and Michelle, Sasha and Malia.

Their beds will be made up and waiting for them before they return from the parties.

"It's very efficient," says Ann Stock, former social secretary to Hillary Clinton and now a Kennedy Center vice president.

But so much to do first.

The girls, 7 and 10, will need schools. A church could be selected. And a puppy—Daddy promised—must be found. Much of establishing this new life will fall to lawyer and hospital executive Michelle Obama, the first-lady-in-waiting who calls herself "mommy-in-chief."

So many little choices—made massive—because a nation will be watching, mulling the message behind every move.

"It's like a new neighbor in the neighborhood. You want to know, 'What do they do after work? Where do they go to church? Do they eat grilled cheese for lunch?'" says Washington event planner and longtime social observer Carolyn Peachey. "It's just that in this case, it's the nation's neighborhood."

The lobbying for a piece of the Obamas has begun.

One power player wants the girls at Sidwell Friends School—after all, Chelsea Clinton went there, and so did Richard Nixon's daughters. Vice President-elect Joe Biden's granddaughters go to Sidwell now.

But the symbolism: private school? Public school? Dad, it's worth noting, has talked a lot about buffing up public education during his campaign. Fair warning: Back when Bill and Hillary Clinton chose Sidwell, Newsweek columnist Eleanor Clift called them "limousine liberals."

It's a lot to consider. And the Obamas have been kind of busy the past few weeks, or months, or years.

"It's literally just getting started," said a senior aide Wednesday. "Their world is built around their daughters, so they're taking this very seriously."

THE GIRLS' ROOMS

The Obama sisters' White House bedrooms most likely will be on the mansion's second floor, where a small kitchen and the family dining room also are located. The third-floor solarium, a glass-enclosed room with modern furniture and stunning views of the Mall, will offer the family a comfortable place to watch TV or play games, said John Riley, director of education for the White House Historical Association.

Malia and Sasha can paint and decorate their rooms however they chose. While other parts of the White House must meet design standards, nothing prohibits the first daughters from hanging Hannah Montana or Jonas Brothers posters in their private quarters.

The girls will have access to all of the mansion's amenities, including the outdoor pool, tennis courts and a 50-seat movie theater.

dance classes and soccer practice. And just like he did during the presidential campaign, Barack Obama almost certainly will adjust his schedule whenever possible to attend his daughters' activities.

"I think you're going to see the president of the United States at soccer games and ballet recitals," said Don Shomon, a former Obama aide. "That's going to be a priority for him."

For the past two years, the Obamas have kept their daughters out of the limelight, save the rare convention or election-night appearance. That task will get tougher in January, when the public will hunger for stories about the button-cute first daughters and their White House adventures.

The girls currently attend The University of Chicago Laboratory Schools, one of the city's top private schools. Aides say Michelle Obama is intensely researching Washington, D.C.-area schools, but no decision has been made.

While historians say Carter had a lonely childhood in the White House, they believe the Obama girls will fare much better because they have each other.

"There are so many nooks and crannies and hidden staircases that they can explore together," Angelo said. "Girls that age are going to feel like they're living in a Nancy Drew book. It's going to be so exciting for them."

4 hurt in South Side accident

Four people were hurt Thursday morning in a traffic accident in Bronzeville. The victims were transported in serious-to-critical condition to Stroger Hospital of Cook County and the University of Chicago Medical Center, Fire Department Cmdr. Will Knight said. The crash, which involved at least one vehicle that overturned, happened about 7:40 a.m. at East 48th Street and South Indiana Avenue.

6 injured in high school fight

Six Wells Community Academy High School students were hurt during a fight in the lunchroom in the Near Northwest Side high school Thursday morning, officials said, and another fight broke out outside the school later. An official for the Chicago Public Schools confirmed that there was a fight inside the school and said that at least three students were taken to hospitals. There were no injuries in the second fight, which occurred a couple blocks from school property.

Armed robbers hit business

Five people robbed a Southwest Side business at gunpoint and tied up three of its employees Thursday morning, Chicago police said. Five robbers, three of them with guns, tied up three employees during the robbery at about 10:15 a.m. at West 42nd Street and South Pulaski Road, Officer Daniel O'Brien said. Police said none of the employees was hurt. The robbers loaded unspecified merchandise into a truck and fled.

Man struck, killed in S. Loop

A man was struck and killed by a car in the South Loop on Wednesday evening, police said. The incident occurred about 7:45 p.m. near the corner of State Street and Roosevelt Road when the man moved "into traffic and was struck by a 1991 Mazda," Chicago Police Officer Amina Greer said. The man was identified as Edward L. Mattingly, 80, of the 1200 block of South Michigan Avenue.

Deal would keep Lollapalooza in Grant Park at least through 2018

Lollapalooza organizers and the Chicago Park District were readying a deal Thursday that would keep the rock festival in Grant Park at least through 2018 and bring in at least $13 million to pay for park improvements.

Surfacing only days after a rally for President-elect Barack Obama was broadcast around the world and showcased Grant Park's spectacular lakefront setting, the new deal with promoter C3 Presents would extend a current five-year contract and ensure the festival as an annual presence through a potential 2016 Summer Olympics date in the city.

"I received a check for $1.6 million [for park improvements] from Lollapalooza last month, and I called [C3 co-owner] Charlie Jones and said, 'Let's talk about a longer deal,'" said Park District Supt. Timothy Mitchell.

The proposal will be brought to the Chicago Park District Board for approval Wednesday. It will be preceded by a public forum at 6:30 p.m. Monday at the Daley Bicentennial Plaza to discuss the new deal.

"There is a lot of tension among residents with noise complaints and congestion in the neighborhood during the festival, and I want to hear what people have to say," said Bob O'Neill of the Grant Park Advisory Council, which is organizing the forum. "I've been in condos [during the festival] where it sounds like Lollapalooza is cranked at full volume ... But it's only three days, and it's not just a community park, it's Chicago's."

Car, fire truck collide

Five firefighters, a woman and a young girl were injured Thursday on the North Side when a car and a fire truck collided at the intersection of Division and Wells Streets and the fire truck caught fire, fire officials said. The fire truck was traveling east on Division Street with its lights flashing when it collided with the car, said Eve Rodriguez, a Fire Department spokeswoman.

Lincoln Park fish killed slowly ahead of pond restoration project

Thousands of fish in Lincoln Park's South Pond began floating to the surface early Thursday after officials from the Illinois Department of Natural Resources applied a special poison to the shallow 5.2-acre lake, a step meant to prepare the area for a $12 million restoration project.

The fish die-off is gradual and likely will take at least two days, said officials with Lincoln Park Zoo, though workmen in two small aluminum boats worked busily Thursday afternoon picking up fish carcasses.

"We were told that the big die-off is during the first day," said Neal David, vice president of facilities at the zoo, which is raising funds for the pond renovation and will take over its maintenance and administration from the Chicago Park District.

The zoo will drain the pond late this month and plans to refashion its shoreline and dredge the lake bottom early next year. The zoo is transforming the pond and surrounding grounds into a native wilderness showcase.

South Pond has been home to bluegill, largemouth bass, black crappie and channel catfish, plus non-native species like goldfish probably dropped there by pet owners who wanted to get rid of them, said David.

The Department of Natural Resources had recommended the fish be destroyed because it would be illegal to introduce nonnative species to the wild by moving them from the pond to public streams or lakes. Because of the pond's dirty water, it's likely the fish who were living there had diseases, making them undesirable for adoption.

Taking on crime in the city

Community policing programs gaining ground as a way to combat criminal activity

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

The bad news: Chicago is outpacing New York and L.A. in murders this year, and Mayor Daley's 2009 budget plan would slow the hiring of new Chicago police officers.

The good news: Interest in the city's community policing program, known as CAPS, is growing, said CAPS director Vance Henry.

Tens of thousands of Chicagoans participate in the CAPS program, which operates in each of the city's 25 police districts, Henry said. Each police district is divided into three sectors, which are then divided into beats. There are about 280 patrol beats in the city.

The CAPS arm of the police department holds beat meetings monthly to exchange information with residents about crime and community problems. Each of the 25 police districts has an office, which may serve as the location for the CAPS meetings, Henry said. Other beat meetings occur in churches, libraries or community centers.

About 6,000 residents attend beat meetings monthly, Henry estimates. To help ensure beat meetings are run smoothly, 25 sergeants and six lieutenants recently were assigned to help the program and follow up with the community to see if problems have been solved.

But there's more bad news for the police force. Daley's budget proposal cuts the coffers for CAPS' implementation office by about $1.5 million to $5.1 million annually.

"The loss of that money is part of the challenge of having to do more with less," Henry said. "We only have 13,000 police officers. We can't be on every street corner."

The map shows the locations of the 25 police district offices, the Homan Square police administration facility and police headquarters in Bronzeville. TSWARTZ@TRIBUNE.COM

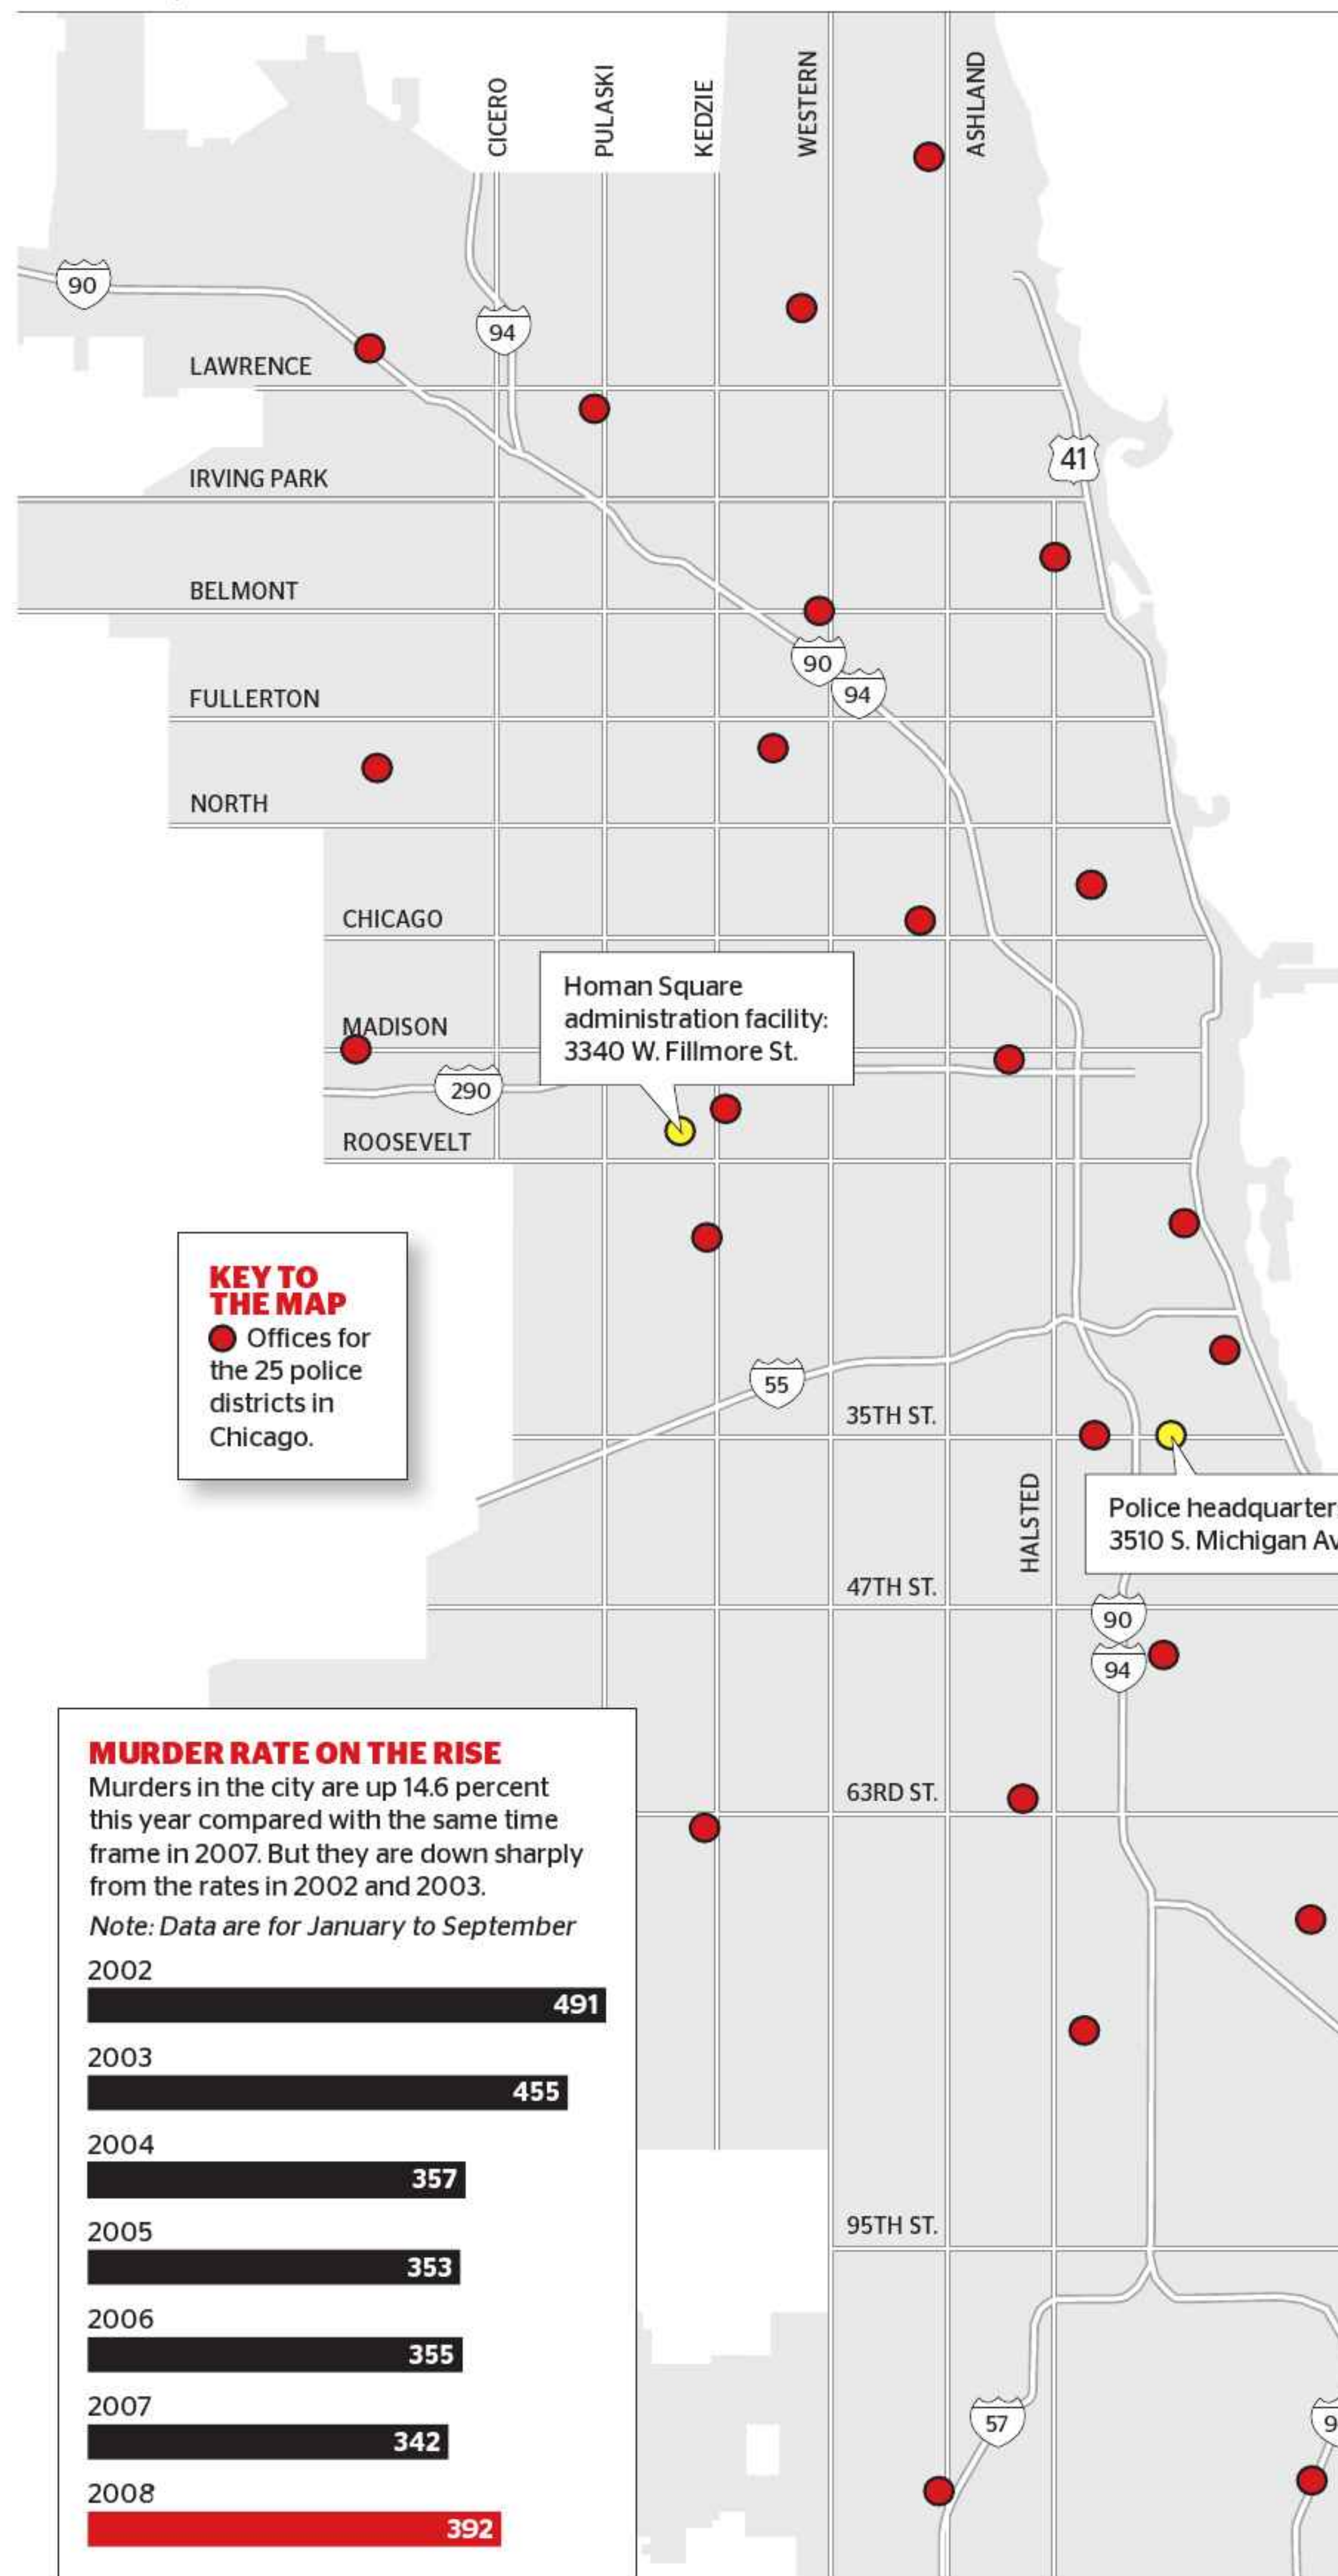

WHAT YOU CAN DO

To get involved in CAPS, the city's community policing program, first you have to know your beat. Call 311 to find out the time and place of your local monthly beat meeting.

CAPS director Vance Henry said the goal is to increase the number of block clubs, in which residents of the same block join together to solve a community problem. CAPS also is looking for help with the safe passage program, an initiative to keep children safe on their way to and from school.

"The hallmark of community policing in Chicago is the people," Henry said. "Be the eyes and the ears."

2 3 more years

The U.S. officially responded Thursday to Iraqi proposals for changes in the draft security pact that would keep American troops in Iraq for three more years. A top Iraqi official said the U.S. accepted some proposals and rejected others, presumably an Iraqi demand for expanded legal control over U.S. soldiers.

An analyst said a statement from Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad congratulating Barack Obama on his election win is a gesture from the hard-line president that he's open to some sort of reconciliation with the U.S.

Federal prosecutors said Thursday that they will not bring criminal charges against Eliot Spitzer for his role in a prostitution scandal, removing a legal cloud that has surrounded the former New York governor since his epic downfall eight months ago.

A small ferry capsized during a storm in the central Philippines on Thursday, and at least eight passengers drowned in waters just 200 yards offshore, officials said. It was the second deadly ferry accident this week in the Philippines, where accidents at sea are common.

Craigslist to crack down on prostitution ads

6 HARTFORD, Conn. Under the watchful eye of law enforcement in 40 states, Craigslist pledged Thursday to crack down on ads for prostitution on its Web sites.

Jim Buckmaster, Craigslist's president, said the deal will allow legitimate escort services to continue advertising, while providing a strong disincentive to companies that are conducting illegal business.

"We don't view it as a penalty, we view it as raising the accountability," he said. "A legitimate business should have no problem with that. They should have no problem

THE PLAN

As part of Craigslist's agreement with attorneys general around the country, anyone who posts an "erotic services" ad will be required to provide a working phone number and pay a fee with a valid credit card. The Web site will provide that information to law enforcement if subpoenaed.

providing a phone number or credit card credentials."

Craigslist, which posts 30 million ads

every month for everything from apartment rentals to jobs in hundreds of cities, also will begin using new search technology in an effort to help authorities find missing children and victims of human trafficking.

Police across the country have been arresting people for using Web sites like Craigslist to advertise the sexual services of women and children.

Buckmaster said the agreement does not cover Craigslist's personal ads, where prostitutes have been found advertising for "dates."

7 LOS ANGELES Valerie Davidson holds a sign Thursday as she takes part in the "No on Prop 8" march and rally in front of the Mormon Church. Formula No. 1

Titans have system that doesn't require all-world QB

MCT

The Tennessee Titans were among the first teams to discover formula football in the salary-cap era—run the ball, play defense and de-emphasize the quarterback position.

Riding the legs of Eddie George and a ferocious defensive front seven, the Titans played formula football in 1999 all the way to the Super Bowl. The running game kept the Tennessee offense on the field more than 31 minutes per game, and the defense set a franchise record with 54 sacks.

Nine years later, the formula still works. The Titans are the NFL's only unbeaten team at 8-0. They rank in the NFL's top 10 in rushing and defense.

In the meantime, the 2000 Baltimore Ravens, 2001 New England Patriots, 2002 Tampa Bay Buccaneers, 2005 Pittsburgh Steelers and 2007 New York Giants all won NFL Championships this decade playing formula football. The Bears made it to the 2006 Super Bowl with the same scheme.

a perceived deficiency at quarterback. Baltimore (Trent Dilfer) and Tampa Bay (Brad Johnson) won Super Bowls with journeymen quarterbacks. New England (Tom Brady), Pittsburgh (Ben Roethlisberger) and New York (Eli Manning) captured titles with young quarterbacks.

The Titans are trying to win with a journeyman quarterback of their own—Kerry Collins, who is starting for his fifth NFL team. He was forced onto the field in the season opener when Vince Young suffered a knee injury. Collins has steered the Titans to seven consecutive victories as the starter.

The Titans aren't asking Collins to win games with his arm, and he's not. He has tossed touchdown passes in only three of his seven starts and hasn't thrown any in his last three games.

But the legs of rookie Chris Johnson and another ferocious defensive front seven give the Titans their best team on paper since 2000, when they posted a 13-3 record on the way to the AFC's top seed.

Kyle Orton still MIA at Bears' practices

Kyle Orton was nowhere in sight Thursday as he missed practice for the second consecutive day nursing a right ankle injury. Coach Lovie Smith said Orton is "getting better" but wouldn't reveal much more information. Smith echoed offensive coordinator Ron Turner's thinking that it would be tougher on Orton the more practice time he missed.

"Practice is important," Smith said. "Every day you miss can't help you any. But that's how it goes sometimes."

The Bears quarterback expressed optimism earlier in the week that he might be able to play Sunday against the unbeaten Tennessee Titans.

But an MRI on Monday determined Orton's high ankle sprain would keep him sidelined three to four weeks, according to a source. Rex Grossman is expected to start on Sunday.

Fabulous backups

Kerry Collins has the Titans undefeated after taking over for quarterback Vince Young after the first game of the season. Rex Grossman took over for injured QB Kyle Orton last week and brought the Bears back to a win. Football doesn't have a monopoly on backups who go on to bigger things. Pop culture is full of them. Take a look.

SHERYL CROW

Backup: Crow was a backup singer during Michael Jackson's "Bad" tour from 1987-1989.
Up front: In 1993, she released her smash solo CD "Tuesday Night Music Club," which went on to sell more than 7 million copies.

KEVIN FEDERLINE

Backup: In another Jackson connection, K-Fed was a backup dancer in the King of Pop's "You Rock My World Video." He also danced in videos for Pink, Destiny's Child and Justin Timberlake.
Up front: He meets Britney Spears on tour, and the rest is history. He goes on to star in "CSI" and "One Tree Hill" before releasing his own CD, "Playing with Fire."

MARIAH CAREY

Backup: In the late-80s, Carey sang backup for Brenda K. Starr. In 1988, Starr gave Columbia Records executive Tommy Mottola Carey's demo tape, and he eventually signed her.
Up front: Mariah's self-titled debut CD was released in 1990, and it made it to No. 1 as well as producing four No. 1 singles.

WHIZKERS

Backup: Always forced behind the scenes at RedEye, Whizkers joined Whizzer as a recurring animated animal in the sports section, much to Whizzer's chagrin.
Upfront: Whizkers has a recurring column, Cat Call, and Whizzer is none to happy about it.

The president is a Chicago guy. Yeah, it's a message of change, but I say let's bring some good old-fashioned Chicago-style solutions to the White House.

By the way, Mr. President-elect, I'm expecting some inauguration tickets. I endorsed you quite some time ago, and I'm from here. I think that's enough.

Also, I've got a lot to offer. For instance, I've already laid out, free of charge, the pillars of the Obama administration. If this seems Chicago heavy, it's because it is.

Chief of staff: Rahm Emanuel. You beat me to it. The quintessential bad cop. Well done.

Secretary of defense: Mike Singletary. They guy knows defense, and let's be honest; he's not going to last with this San Francisco gig. It's a train wreck. Let's get him where he can flourish.

National security adviser: After little deliberation, I went with Mike Ditka. Call it a hunch. I wouldn't want to stare him down in negotiations.

Secretary of state: Michael Jordan. This one was tougher, because this job would actually require Michael to show up for work every day, something he's not accustomed to. You can't do this from a golf course or casino, but he's known the world over. That's something.

Secretary of interior: Whoever the Chicago Park District guy is. After looking at Grant Park the other night, one word: pristine.

Secretaries of treasury: The Wirtz family. No one is tighter with the purse strings, my friends.

Ambassador to Micronesia: Oprah. Real nice, easy job for the queen of talk. They'd love her, and it gets her out of Chicago where it's cold.

Head of FEMA: The mayor. Just for the news conferences. "Yeah, it's a disaster, but yeah, come on, I mean disasters happen. This is what happens when disasters happen."

Transportation: The CTA honchos. I'm just kidding, that's silly.

On to the important stuff. Jeff Fisher (my favorite ex-Bear) brings the Titans to Chicago on Sunday. This smells like the fourth loss. The reasons are simple. 1) Rex Grossman is our quarterback. 2) Our defense has turned into a girls' powder puff team. 3) Devin Hester thinks it's neat to run into piles and not take chances. 4) Rex is our quarterback.

Let's hope and pray that Kyle Orton's high ankle sprain heals very soon, or we'll all look like John McCain on election night.

1 If the Titans can go 8-0 with Kerry Collins at QB, then Vince Young must be on 24-hour lockdown.	... your children really, really, really can grow up to be whatever they want.	... the Steelers can go 5-0 with Santonio Holmes.	... the Bears can go 1-0 against the Titans with Kerry Collins.	... I can't wait for MY midlife crisis to kick in!
2 Would you rather have an injured Kyle Orton or a healthy Rex Grossman?	Healthy Rex. A Rex drive is better than no Rex drive.	Injured Kyle. He kind of looks like a winning Shaggy from "Scooby-Doo."	Did you just call Rex fat? Bet breakup weight isn't the only thing he loses.	A retired Jim McMahon.	Neither.
3 Obama vs. McCain on Tuesday. Bulls vs. Phoenix tonight. Irony?	Maybe, but this time the old men (Shaq, Grant Hill) win.	And not long after Phoenix leaves town, the circus moves in. Irony???	The only literary devices McCain uses are eyeglasses for shortsightedness.	Uh, no. Irony is not expected. These events were scheduled.	Maybe, but not everything is so black or white. Some things are a mixture.
4 How should the Bulls defend Amare Stoudemire?	Get Sarah Palin to dress him, and the feds will be on him in a nanosecond.	Beam in Hologram Anderson Cooper.	Isn't it bad enough we defend our own players? We have to defend the Suns too?	I'd get the same guy who defended R. Kelly.	Defend him?! Why? That flop he had against Travis Diener was criminal.
5 What do you imagine goes on at baseball's GM meetings?	Jokes, lots of jokes. Mostly about the Cubs.	There's a lot of maneuvering, innuendo and no action. Insert joke about 4 a.m. bar here.	I don't know: How many GMs does it take to screw a league?	You know, doing their hair and tickle fights. Same as in the clubhouse.	Pot smoking, beer guzzling, pole dancers ... Well, that's how my GM Fantasy League works.

FIRE HITS

Cuauhtemoc Blanco's entire family flew in from Mexico to attend Thursday's game.

Fire all revved up

MLS title game a step away with victory over the Revolution

Associated Press

Chris Rolfe had a goal and an assist, and the Fire finally figured out how to beat the New England Revolution in the MLS playoffs with a 3-0 victory Thursday night that eliminated the defending Eastern Conference champions.

Wilman Conde and Gonzalo Segares also scored for the Fire, who will play either Columbus or Kansas City next Thursday for the Eastern Conference title. The Crew and Wizards play Saturday night in Columbus. New England, which was trying to reach the conference finals for a record seventh straight year, instead ended the year on a seven-game winless streak.

The Fire and New England have met in the playoffs six of the last seven seasons, with the Revolution winning four of the matchups—including each of the last three years. But the home team has never lost, and Rolfe and Conde made sure that stat held up for another year, scoring in a 5-minute stretch that spanned halftime.

Cuauhtemoc Blanco appeared to have a good angle on a right-footed shot from just outside the penalty box in the second minute of extra time, only to have Matt Reis knock the ball clear as he dived to his left. But the ball went straight to Rolfe, who was at the top of the penalty box, and he tapped it into the net for a 1-0 lead. Reis, still on the ground, never had a chance.

Four minutes after halftime, Conde headed Justin Mapp's free kick into the near side of the net from only inches away.

The Revolution didn't give Jon Busch, the MLS goalkeeper of the year, much of a test. Their best chance came in the 58th, when Kenny Mansally took a left-footed shot from just inside the box. Busch dived and got a hand on it.

Shalrie Joseph also headed a corner into Busch's hands in the 43rd minute.

The Fire tacked on another goal in the 74th minute when Segares scored at close range.

New England's chances of making a run in the post-season were hurt before the playoffs even began. Steve Ralston, who led the Revolution in goals and assists, cracked his fibula on Oct. 11 while Taylor Twellman, the team's co-leader with eight goals, is sidelined indefinitely because of a concussion.

Chris Albright was ejected in the 83rd after tackling Blanco from behind.

You know what I hate about this time of year? No, not the "Heroes" collapse that mirrors the Cubs. No, not the inevitable march toward 10 degree highs. No, not the ironic playing of "November Rain" on the radio.

What I really hate is the onset of darkness at about, oh, 4 p.m.

Every game is a night game now. And when it gets dark, I want to sleep. It's tough out there for a tired dog.

Here now, my TV picks—if I can stay awake.

NBA Bulls vs. Phoenix 7:30 p.m. ESPN

Phoenix's Amare Stoudemire just dropped 49 points on Indiana. That should equal about 149 vs. the Bulls.

NBA Dallas at Denver 9:30 p.m. ESPN

Not a good week to be a Maverick. Denver in a landslide.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL Nevada at Fresno St. 8 p.m. ESPN2

It's the Wolfpack vs. the Bulldogs. I decry canine-on-canine crime.

Jimmie Johnson, driver of the #48 Lowe's Chevrolet, leads the field at the start of the NASCAR Sprint Cup Series Pep Boys Auto 500 at Atlanta Motor Speedway on Oct. 26. GETTY IMAGES

Too much JJ a bad thing?

Jimmie Johnson gets a bit riled up over the opinions floating around on how to make NASCAR's Chase for the championship more competitive and exciting.

And that talk—whether it be in garages, on talk shows or on the Internet—seems to be escalating as Johnson makes a run at his third consecutive Sprint Cup title Sunday at Phoenix International Raceway.

Could it be the racing world is tiring of Johnson's domination and would like to see NASCAR "Jimmie-proof" the Chase?

"It is interesting to hear the comments, and it makes me laugh that our sport can be susceptible to that whole reality TV buzz that's coming along, and if you don't like it, let's have a fan vote and let's change it," said Johnson, who leads Carl Edwards by 106 points with two races remaining.

If Johnson were to wrap up the title at PIR, that would render next week's Championship Week at Homestead-Miami Speedway meaningless.

"We made an adjustment to the points system a few years back to make it more competitive. What else are we going to change?" said Johnson, who has won 13 of 48 Chase races since NASCAR adopted the 10-race playoff format in 2004.

And while critics argue that Johnson has turned the excitement of the Chase into a ho-hum affair, he knows he's a flat tire or a wreck away from making things interesting.

"There's still 400 miles at Homestead and 300 at Phoenix," Johnson said.

"A lot can happen."

Hamilton: Racism is no joke

Hamilton

LONDON Lewis Hamilton rejected F1 boss Bernie Ecclestone's assertion on Thursday that racist abuse directed at the driver probably started as a joke.

F1's first black champ was the target of racist abuse on a Spanish Web site and endured other insults in the buildup to Sunday's Brazilian Grand Prix.

"[It was] probably beginning as a joke rather than anything abusive," Ecclestone said Thursday in a radio interview. "I don't see why people should have been [insulted by it]. These things are people expressing themselves."

Hamilton disagreed and said he "didn't see it as a joke."

HOMETOWN HITS

The emotional heartbreak of the Cubs' postseason flop didn't prevent fans from gobbling up $60 tickets to this winter's Cubs Convention at the Chicago Hilton & Towers. The Cubs announced Thursday morning that the 24th annual fan fest sold out in only 24 minutes.

Kyle Orton was not on the practice field for the second consecutive day Thursday, not a surprise considering the quarterback is expected to be out for Sunday's game against the Titans with a high ankle sprain. Safety Mike Brown was back at practice after his calf injury.

Defenseman Brian Campbell and forwards Patrick Kane and Jonathan Toews were listed on NHL's all-star ballot, but one Blackhawks standout was left off: Patrick Sharp, who leads the Hawks and is second in the league with nine goals.

THURSDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL Broncos spoil Quinn debut

Jay Cutler turned Brady Quinn's big night into his own prime-time showcase. Cutler passed for a career-high 447 yards, throwing three touchdown passes in the fourth quarter to rally the Denver Broncos to a 34-30 win over the Cleveland Browns, spoiling Quinn's highly hyped debut as an NFL starter.

GOLF Amateur gets 5 holes-in-one

Central Illinois amateur golfer Curt Hocker is on a roll. Ask anyone at the El Paso Golf Club, where the 22-year-old has recorded five holes-in-one in the last week, including two Saturday. "I don't know what to think," Hocker said. "After each one I say it's over, and it keeps happening."

Beer buffs

Knowing how to swiftly down a brew does not a beer connoisseur make. (Although it does help.) Get schooled in the art of craft beer at the Sixth Annual Festival of Wood and Barrel Aged Beer and sample more than 110 suds aged in oak and wine barrels. Participating local breweries include Rock Bottom (last year's Best of Show winner) and Three Floyds Brewing; Dogfish Head (Delaware), The Livery (Michigan) and Rogue Ales (based in Oregon) add national flavor. Piece brewer Jonathan Cutler is among a panel that sips, samples and judges the brews. Admission includes 12 drink tickets; buy more for just $1 each. Food also available for purchase. 6 p.m. Saturday. $35-$45. Journeymen Plumber's Hall, 1340 W. Washington Blvd. Tickets: illinoisbeer.com

Art you glad we told you?

Here's a quick head's up (and no, we won't judge): SOFA Chicago is not a showcase of cushions, couches or any other manner of plush seating devices. Rather, it's the international exposition of Sculpture Objects and Functional Art, a sale and display of all types of three-dimensional works, ranging from glass to ceramics and fiber to wood. Dealers from around the globe—95 in all—converge in Chicago for the 15th annual show, which also includes a lecture series and film on topics relating to art. 11 a.m. Friday-Saturday; noon Sunday. $15; $25 for a three-day pass. Oh! Christmas tree

Tommy Hilfiger is in town to get you in the festive spirit at Macy's Great Tree Lighting. Head to the seventh floor Walnut Room to see the two-story spruce adorned with nearly 15,000 lights and 4,000 ornaments, plus toys from FAO Schwartz that complete the Santa's workshop theme. Afterward, Hilfiger signs copies of his book, "Iconic America." Noon Saturday. Free. 111 N. State St. 312-781-5454.

Econo-wine

At Four Farthings' Wine Tasting and Sale, you can sample before you spend. Try more than 60 wines from Spain, Australia, France, New Zealand, Italy and California and then order your favorites for just $12-$15 per bottle, or shell out enough for a case and host your own tastings. Selections include 2005 Hahn Estates pinot noir from Monterey, Calif., 2005 Oberon cabernet from the Mondavi family in Napa Valley, Calif., and 2006 Catena malbec from Mendoza, Argentina. Cheese, crackers and fruit complement the samples. 3 p.m. Saturday. $25. 2060 N. Cleveland Ave. 773-935-2060.

Talk is cheap

Hold on to your (Elisabeth) Hasselbeck and brace for Whoopi-style barbs during "The Spew," an improv parody of daytime chatfest "The View." The show, based entirely on audience suggestions, pokes fun at the TV series' hosts and guests while the six-member cast dishes on the week's hot topics. 7 p.m. Sunday. Through Nov. 16. $10. Tough going for Jackson

New York Times News Service

Janet Jackson is having a rough year.

Her current album, "Discipline," arrived in February to such disappointing sales that in September, with fewer than a half-million copies sold, she ended her contract with the label, Island Def Jam, leaving her independent.

On top of that, the 42-year-old singer is not choreographing any makeup dates for the seven performances on her troubled "Rock Witchu" tour that initially were postponed because of her illness "due to conflicts in the singer's schedule," said a statement released by tour organizer Live Nation on Tuesday.

The canceled stops, originally scheduled Sept. 29 to Oct. 13, include: Montreal; Boston; Philadelphia; Greensboro, N.C.; Ft. Lauderdale; Uncasville, Conn.; and Syracuse, N.Y.

Her first tour in seven years started shakily this fall, with shows suddenly canceled or postponed. Her spokesman said that Jackson, 42, suffered from vestibular migraines that could cause dizziness—a problem for a performer who, in concert, is more a dancer than a singer. The tour's original opening act, LL Cool J, dropped off the bill.

But the shows she did perform were not weighed down, some critics said. And they followed a familiar script.

Her constant subject is longing: for sex both tender and kinky but also for companionship and devotion, a theme she does well.

AP, REDEYE CONTRIBUTED.

Hot as ever

Coldplay on global tour as latest album's sales continue to pile up

Detroit Free Press

Performing in Coldplay—performing in the world's biggest band—could get comfy. Too comfy, even.

For bassist Guy Berryman, though, the nightly thrill is intact. Stepping on stage still brings a tingle—that rush of blood, you might call it.

"I don't get nervous anymore. But I still get that great sense of excitement," he said. "I love that moment right before we go on, that anticipation of the lights coming down. It never tires for me."

Coldplay is on a global tour supporting "Vida La Vida or Death and All His Friends," the British band's fourth album. In a year of music industry struggles, the album is a big-time standout, having enjoyed the biggest debut yet for Berryman, vocalist-pianist Chris Martin, guitarist Jonny Buckman and drummer Will Champion. In the U.S. alone, the album sold 720,000 copies its first week, according to Nielsen SoundScan—more than 300,000 of them on the first day.

With sales of the album continuing to pile up, the band has been on the road nearly nonstop since June.

NEW MUSIC

On Nov. 25, Coldplay will release "Prospekt's March," an eight-song EP featuring material left over from the "Viva la Vida" sessions and a new version of the single "Lost," remixed by Jay-Z.

"We've got four records now, so we have to get the balance right between the new album and the old songs people want to hear," Berryman said. "We try to make it as dynamic as possible from beginning to end."

A revamped production team has brought a new visual look to Coldplay's stage production and even introduced what Berryman describes as "a few things people haven't seen before at other concerts."

Chicagoans' best bets to catch the band before it goes back to Europe are Nov. 13 in Kansas City, Mo., and Nov. 14 in St. Paul.

For the decade-old band, life on the road is low-key these days.

"We destroyed ourselves a few times by not looking after ourselves—partying every night, staying up late," Berryman said, recalling the band's early days. "Certainly, for me in particular, we're really just trying to keep healthy. It's that age-old thing: healthy body, healthy mind. I'd have laughed at myself a few years ago if I could hear myself saying that. But it's true."

Coldplay will wrap up its year of touring with a series of U.K. dates in December. After a month break, the band will regroup in the studio to begin cutting material for a fifth album.

"The plan, in an ideal world," Berryman said, "is to have something finished by the end of 2009."

Don't misuse the word insecure

I'm beginning to wonder if anyone knows the true meaning of the word insecure.

People often misuse it.

My trusty Merriam-Webster's Pocket Dictionary defines insecure as uncertain, unsafe or fearful. Some people take the meaning to a different level by ascribing a value judgment; they define insecure as a byproduct of low self-esteem or paranoia.

I was listening to the radio in my car a few nights ago. I happened onto "Sticky Situation" on B96, a fun segment in which a listener calls in to described a suspicion that his/her significant other is messing around. Julian, the DJ, then prank calls the could-be cheater, claiming that he/she has won a prize, and asks for the name of the suspected cheater's significant other for the prize voucher. If the suspected cheater submits the wrong name, he/she is busted—on the air.

A female caller suspected her boyfriend of cheating. She knew the name of the alleged other woman and was looking for the truth so she could dump him if he had been cheating.

Claiming to be calling from a movie theater, Julian told Boyfriend that he had won a free trip for two to Hawaii. Boyfriend was elated and, without hesitation, named the other woman as his trip companion.

The female caller began screaming: "You [bleep]! I can't believe you [bleep] that [bleep]!"

Boyfriend's reaction was priceless; he immediately jumped on the defensive and accused her of being insecure.

At that point Boyfriend worked my last nerve, and I ceased to be entertained. I was tempted to call and deliver my inspired soliloquy (intentionally devoid of swear words, so my message would be heard loud and clear). I would have said: "Dude, you're delusional. Here's the reality: She has every right to be insecure because you've ruined the relationship by cheating, and now you're busted and embarrassed. You've caused this problem, so deal with the consequences. And get a dictionary, ding-dong."

Yes, I feel strongly about the misuse of insecure.

Many years ago when I confronted my then-boyfriend with the suspicion that he was running around with other girls, he tried to smooth it over by telling me that I was letting my insecurities get the best of me.

He did not say "No, I'm not cheating on you." It was far more convenient to tell me that I was imagining a problem based on a self-esteem deficit.

I tried to quell my booming inner voice, which told me that he was lying to me. Fortunately my inner voice is persistent, and eventually I discovered that my suspicions were warranted.

Insecurity is what it is, without judgment. Relationships in jeopardy bring about uncertainty and fear. If one party is upsetting the stability of the relationship, the other party will and should feel insecure. If it doesn't feel right, I recommend embracing the insecurity and trusting the inner voice.

I promised myself that I would never again attempt to stifle my instincts. If any future boyfriend sense that I'm feeling uncertain about the relationship, I will know he's a good guy if he has an interest in rectifying the problem together, without immediately pointing the finger of blame in my direction.

If he accuses me of being insecure, I'll try to resist the urge to call B96 and have Julian verify my sticky situation.

'Role'ing IN THE AISLES

Paul Rudd talks to RedEye about his latest movie, Paris Hilton, 'Ghostbusters' and Adam Ant. Need we say more?

By Matt Pais

Not many people could turn a kids' movie premise into an R-rated film and wind up with something that's both funny and sweet.

But that's exactly what Paul Rudd—who's demonstrated varying degrees of sweetness, a dry wit and a foul mouth in films such as "The 40-Year-Old Virgin" and "Knocked Up"—has done with the comedy "Role Models."

In the film, Rudd and Seann William Scott play two slackers who get arrested and, as their punishment, must mentor a socially awkward teen (Christopher Mintz-Plasse of "Superbad") and a 10-year-old (Bobb'e J. Thompson) with an awfully adult vocabulary.

What follows is hilarious, profane and ultimately uplifting. The script went

FAST-PAISED REVIEW

"With plenty of heart, constant laughs and a bring-it-on greeting to its well-deserved R rating, this is close to an ideal studio comedy."

Matt Pais gives "Role Models" 3.5 stars out of 4. Read the complete review out metromix.com.

through many forms in many hands, but it's Rudd's rewrite—with help from pals David Wain and Ken Marino—that lands on the big screen Friday.

During an interview at the Peninsula Hotel, RedEye spoke with Rudd about people's expectations for "Role Models," his unusual hobbies and what he has in common with Paris Hilton.

A fan site about you is called "Unassuming Charisma." What do you think about that, and how would you describe yourself in two words?

I'm incredibly flattered that anyone would set up a Web site for me. I didn't [make] it. I've visited it a lot; a couple of times. So if I had to use two words to describe me it would be "Massive Ego."

People may bring kids to "Role Models" and only later find out it's not so wholesome.

It's filthy ... I like the idea of a really, really raunchy R-rated kids' movie.

What will go through the heads of people who bring young siblings, nieces, etc.?

They'll leave within three minutes.

[He goes on to describe an early scene in the film, which can't be printed here.] That's not in a kids' movie. It is so gross. ... And once they see the 10-year-old kid (Thompson) start saying "[Bleep] you" all over the place and accusing Seann of trying to take his pants off, it'll be different than what they expected.

[It's] a movie about growing up that could destroy the nation's youth.

It's a movie that I know for a fact, if I was a 13-, 14-year-old kid, I would love this movie. But I would not be able to buy tickets to it.

What's an unusual habit you had when you were younger that if you were assigned to a court-appointed mentor, they'd be angry they had to mentor you? I had lots of weird things. I wasn't really into Dungeons and Dragons or Larping-type stuff that [Mintz-Plasse is] in the movie. But as a teenager I was way into New Wave music. [Going] into 8th grade I really prided myself—I didn't own a pair of jeans and I wore ties to school every day. I tried to kinda dress like Duckie from "Pretty in Pink." I was in a big Adam Ant phase, I asked [my mom]—'cause I had curly hair, kinda like Adam Ant—and I asked her if I could shave this part of my head [points to front of his hair] to give myself a receding hairline like Adam Ant. And she said, "No [bleeping] way am I going to let you do that!" I didn't get what a receding hairline was; I just thought it looked really cool.

DO YOU KNOW PAUL RUDD?

You're rumored to be appearing in the next "Ghostbusters" movie. What skill do you think you could bring to the franchise? If I was in the next "Ghostbusters" film, I feel like I could slime just about anybody in the cast and I don't even need a ghost or a proton pack.

That makes you qualified? I think so. I'll do it in the room when I audition.

Your next movie, "I Love You, Man," where you search for a best man for your wedding, is similar to Paris Hilton's show, where she looks for a new BFF. What else do you have in common with Paris?

I have a sex tape. I'm also the heir of hotel magnates. I have my own cologne/perfume. I have several lap dogs. And for all intents and purposes, I do think that most things are "hot."

There's never anything in the tabloids about you. Make something up.

I've got three balls. Down south. Who else can say that? Mark Linn-Baker from "Perfect Strangers?" And now comes a lawsuit.

Anything else?

No. It's a banal, very, very normal, hum-drum existence. It's a nice life. I have a wife and a son and I watch "Project Runway" and I play cards on Tuesday night and I watch a football game on Sunday. As boring as this sounds, that's it. That's what you got. Jesus, I'm depressing myself now.

‘Zachary’ depicts family tragedy in hopes of changing laws

Los Angeles Times

By all accounts, Dr. Andrew Bagby was a wonderful guy—a young family-practice physician with a terrific personality and loving parents, relatives and friends.

But on Nov. 5, 2001, the 28-year-old Bagby was shot to death in Derry Township, Pa., near the hospital where he worked. He was wounded five times—in the face, the chest, twice in the buttocks and in the back of the head—with a .22-caliber handgun.

The prime suspect was his ex-girlfriend, Dr. Shirley Turner. Possessing a dual passport, she fled to St. John’s in Canada’s Newfoundland and soon announced she was pregnant with Bagby’s child. She named their son Zachary.

Bagby’s oldest friend, filmmaker Kurt Kuenne, initially wanted to make a film to honor his slain buddy for family, friends and the future recipients of the scholarships created in Bagby’s name at his workplace in Pennsylvania and his alma mater, the medical school at Memorial University of Newfoundland.

But after the birth of Zachary in 2002, Kuenne changed direction and decided the documentary would be a perfect way for the little boy to get to know his father.

As it turned out, “Dear Zachary: A Letter to a Son About His Father,” which opens Friday, ended up centering on Bagby’s loving parents, David and Kathleen Bagby.

The couple left their home in Sunnyvale, Calif., and moved to St. John’s after Turner was arrested there, then released on bail—her psychiatrist helped pay for it—and given custody of Zachary as she awaited extradition to the U.S.

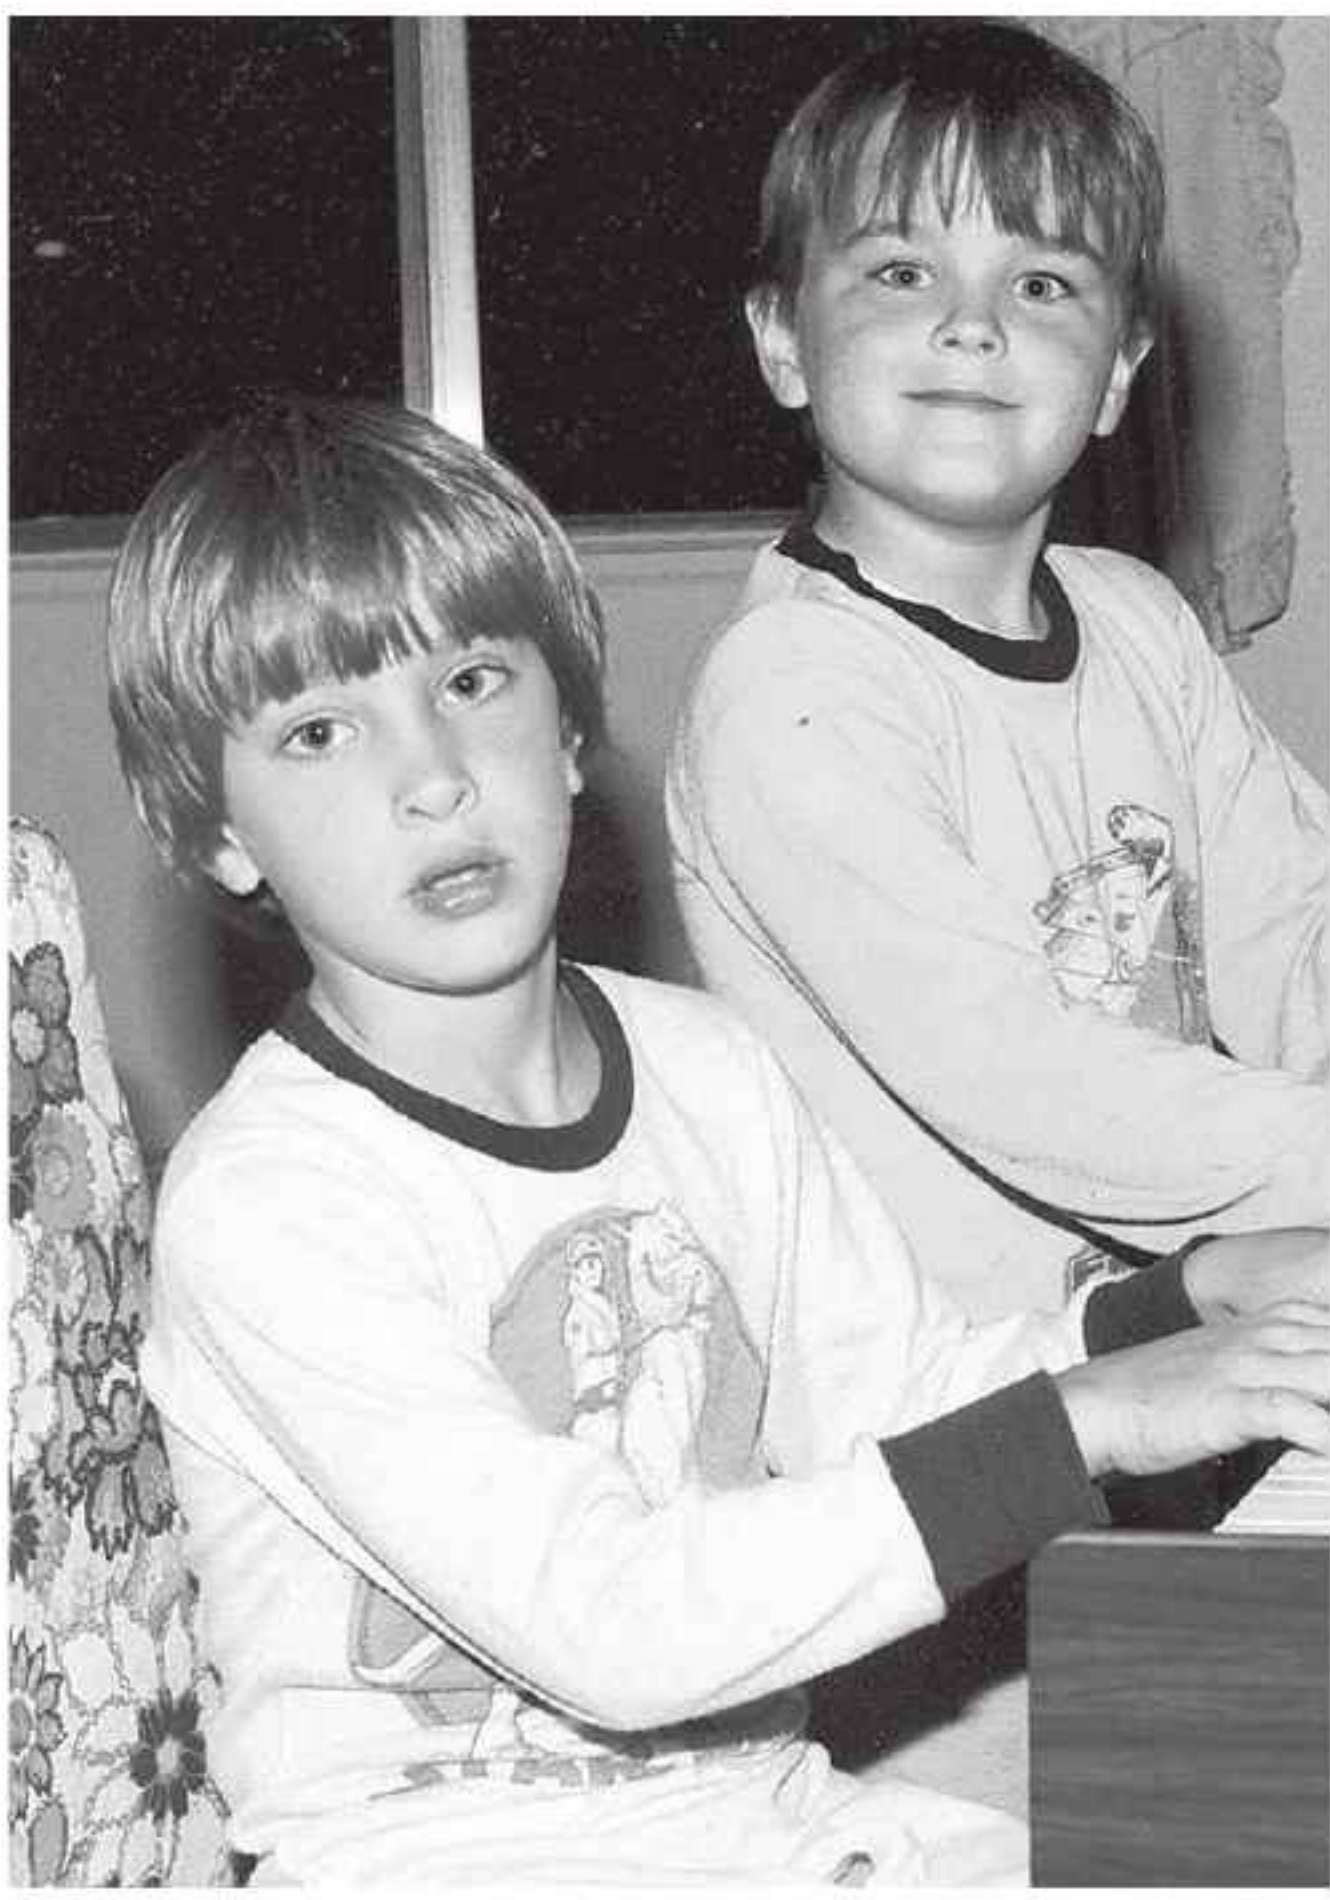

Fearing for the boy’s safety, David and Kathleen Bagby attempted to win custody of him, but they ran into judicial roadblocks in Canada. While they were trying to persuade the system that Turner was unstable (she had attempted suicide when a previous boyfriend broke up with her), the Bagbys were beset with another devastating tragedy. This forms another major turning point in the film.

The target audience for “Dear Zachary,” Kuenne said, is the Canadian voting public, which he hopes will change the bail and extradition laws in Canada after seeing the movie.

“We have had a lot of film festival screenings in Canada,” he said. “I did a letter-writing campaign to all 400 members of the Parliament when the film had its premiere back in April, inviting them to come to a screening.”

A senator from Alberta, he said, recently saw the film in Edmonton.

“I haven’t talked to him yet, but he spoke to Andrew’s father after the screening,” he said. “The audience gave it two standing ovations.”

Soul Men
Nearly 30 years

after going their separate ways, former soul singers Floyd (Bernie Mac) and Louis (Samuel L. Jackson) reunite to drive from California to New York to perform at a concert honoring their recently deceased frontman.

The verdict: This tale of old pros quickly turns into amateur hour, with comedic hijinks way, way below the sort of situations these two vets should have to deal with. Mac and Jackson seem too angry when they're jawing at each other to land on anything funny. Much of the film feels bitter and sad rather than a better-late-than-never opportunity to rejoice. Thank heaven for the musical performances, the only moments that find soul in this slop.

Samuel L. Jackson remembers late co-star Bernie Mac

Associated Press

The buddy road-trip movie "Soul Men" will be remembered as the untimely swan song of Bernie Mac, the Chicago comic who died in August at 50.

When it's about Mac and Samuel L. Jackson, co-starring as former band mates bickering over decades of pent-up resentments, "Soul Men" has a raunchy, buoyant energy about it. Mac and Jackson bounce off each other with expert timing and wild-eyed volatility.

That's not surprising, considering Mac and Jackson were longtime friends who had been looking for a project to do together.

"All kinds of things made it worthwhile," Jackson told the New York Times Syndicate. "Plus Bernie and I like each other a lot."

Jackson said he didn't get to spend much time with Mac, who starred in "The Bernie Mac Show," the Fox comedy series that aired from 2001 to 2006. But the Chicago comic used to perform at Jackson's golf tournament in Bermuda, the actor said.

"We used to talk about blowing up and being famous and doing all this stuff and all of that ...," Jackson said. "I would run into him at functions, and we got to get together."

In the film, Mac's Floyd Henderson and Jackson's Louis Hinds were singers for Marcus Hooks (John Legend), and the three were a popular Motown-style group. With the announcement of Marcus' death decades later, Louis and Floyd reunite for a tribute concert at the Apollo Theater in Harlem.

Mac, who died of pneumonia and the lung disease sarcoidosis, was ill for much of the "Soul Men" shoot, but Jackson describes him as ready, willing and mostly able during production.

"Bernie was in and out of being in great health to OK health," Jackson told the Times news service. "He used his oxygen when he needed it, so between shots I was always saying, 'Bernie, put the oxygen on.'"

"But if there was an audience there and a microphone, Bernie went to work," Jackson said. "It was like a marriage made in heaven. He'd say, 'There's an audience here. I've got to tell some jokes.' So he'd be doing his standup act."

The end of "Soul Men" features a dedication to Mac and co-star Isaac Hayes, who also died in August after suffering a stroke. Among the footage is Mac cracking up extras and an interview with Mac discussing his career in which the comedian says he cherishes "each doggone moment" of his life.

Jackson, who called them "two real soul men," said Mac would have seen the film as a fitting final project.

"It's the perfect send-off for a guy we knew, admired and just were so in love with," Jackson told the news service. "It's perfect."

Keener stays daring with 'Synecdoche'

Newsday

Once considered the indie movie queen, Catherine Keener has become a ubiquitous presence in films ranging from "Capote" to "The 40-Year-Old Virgin" to "Into the Wild."

With "Synecdoche, NY," opening Friday, the actress reunites with Oscar-winning screenwriter Charlie Kaufman, who wrote "Being John Malkovich," which starred Keener.

In "Synecdoche" Keener follows Kaufman further through the portal between commercial cinema and something disconcertingly, touchingly surreal, about a director (Philip Seymour Hoffman) whose entire life is reduced to an act of theater. Keener recently chatted about the audience-challenging movie.

Did Kaufman say he gave you an 856-page script?

I'm not sure that was literal, but it was a big, fat script. The first time I saw the film, it was four hours long, and I thought, "I can easily watch this for four hours"—that's how engrossed I was. It felt very much like a dream was made into a movie—I was riding the wave of it. I was so interested in what was going on. It felt like everyone was singing out their dream with no boundaries.

Your part—as the artist wife of Caden, who leaves him and takes their daughter—wasn't that big on the page, but don't you sort of resonate throughout the film?

I didn't realize that was going to happen. I didn't know I'd be recalled so much, or that she instigates the trauma by which—and this is my perception—the rest of Caden's life is informed by. Which happens with things that are traumatic. So yeah, my role was pretty small, but it felt like I had to hold that up for everyone else to keep going.

Common wisdom says that parts in movies for women get scarcer as they go along, but you seem to be working more.

I guess, yeah. I'm in too many movies. I work a lot because I work in a lot of these smaller-budget movies. I don't make a lot of money, consequently, so I do have to work more often. But that's my choice—to seek jobs that don't make me want to kill myself after three months of hell. For me, there has to be a reason for me to pull myself away from my family. Otherwise, I'd stay home and find a job.

Telemarketing? Something!

You have a real affection for your directors. Most of these directors, if they asked me to stand on my head for two hours with no lines, I'd do it. Honestly. That's why I'm careful about who I work for. I really need a director. I think most actors do, and they feel they don't, but I do. I don't see the overall picture. I'm a hired gun. And I just want to hit the ball when it's my time up.

!!! Synecdoche, NY (R)

Distraught over his wife (Catherine Keener) and daughter leaving him and an illness that he thinks is terminal, theater director Caden (Philip Seymour Hoffman) uses money from a hefty grant to stage a constantly evolving play based on real life. Nearly two decades later, Caden struggles to reunite with his grown-up daughter, connect with his assistant (Samantha Morton) and an actress (Michelle Williams).

The verdict: Boiling down the world into a tiny organism with long, long arms, writer-director Charlie Kaufman reaches for big ideas about love, words and art. "Synecdoche" intentionally loses grip on reality, but it also loses sight of Caden's actual life and leaves viewers curious why he so casually distances himself from people who aren't in his play. As the film continually doubles back on itself, you can't help but think that wow, this must be what it looks like when your life flashes before your eyes.

WHO'S THAT VOICE?

"Madagascar: Escape 2 Africa" is packed with actors known for their decidedly adult fare. Listen for the voices of:

Ben Stiller as Alex the lion

Alpha lion Zuba (Bernie Mac), his wife (Sherri Shepherd) and son Alex (Ben Stiller) wave to the no-longer-marooned tourists in "Madagascar: Escape 2 Africa." DREAMWORKS

Chris Rock as Marty the zebra

David Schwimmer as Melman the giraffe

Jada Pinkett Smith as Gloria the hippo

Alec Baldwin as Makunga the lion

Also listen for ...

- >> Sacha Baron Cohen as Julien the Lemur king
- >> Cedric the Entertainer as Maurice the lemur
- >> Bernie Mac as Zuba the lion
- >> Sherri Shepherd as Mom the lioness
- >> Andy Richter as Mort the penguin
- >> Will.i.am. as Moto Moto the singing hippo

'Madagascar' stars just wanna have fun

The Washington Post

When Ben Stiller and Chris Rock were first asked to become a talking lion and a cartoon zebra, neither had toddlers to impress or PTA colleagues to please.

Stiller was busy strutting down fashion runways as the "really, really, ridiculously good-looking" Derek Zoolander. Rock was doing some strutting of his own, across the stages of his sold-out comedy shows.

So why'd they sign up for "Madagascar," an animated movie about escaped Central Park Zoo animals on the lam in Madagascar?

"It just seemed fun," Stiller said, now seven years later as the sequel, "Madagascar: Escape 2 Africa," opens Friday.

And it was fun, as it turned out. Fun for him, fun for Rock, fun for millions of moviegoers and more than half-a-billion dollars' worth of fun for DreamWorks.

If you want to know where Hollywood is hanging out these days, check that DreamWorks studio. Or its competition down at Pixar. Or at the back entrance to each, banging on the door to get in.

Doing voice work for animated films has never been a more popular career move for sought-after stars, one that's enjoyable, shows some winking playfulness, offers little risk and huge potential for upside. Think Mike Myers, Eddie Murphy, Robin Williams, Jerry Seinfeld, Renee Zellweger, Tom Hanks.

Chris Rock has a six-word philosophy for picking film projects: "Just go with the best movie."

Thus, he signed on to "Madagascar" and its sequel simply because "they're good movies!" Makes no difference if it's live action, animated or Claymation; it's not method that matters, he says, but the material.

"I'm a comedian," he said. "Anything that's funny I want to be involved in. ... This is definitely as funny as any live-action film I've been involved in."

Madagascar: Escape 2 Africa

(G)

While trying to return to the Central Park Zoo from Madagascar, Alex the dancing lion (Ben Stiller), Marty the zebra (Chris Rock), Melman the giraffe (David Schwimmer), Gloria the hippo (Jada Pinkett Smith) and the rest of the gang crash in Africa. There, Alex reunites with his parents (Bernie Mac, Sherri Shepherd) and tries to prove to dad that he's tough enough to be a "real lion"; Marty attempts to distinguish himself from other zebras; and Melman longs to confess his love for Gloria. Sacha Baron Cohen and Cedric the Entertainer again lend their voices, with new contributions from Alec Baldwin and will.i.am.

The verdict: Totally, depressingly average, "Africa" is so irrelevant and uninspiring it practically rolls its eyes at itself.

One-man show

Associated Press

Chris Lilley is a triple threat—twice over.

The Australian comic created, wrote and stars in the mockumentary “Summer Heights High,” which debuts at 9:30 p.m. Sunday on HBO.

And he plays the eight-part series’ three main characters: an unruly misfit named Jonah; a snooty 16-year-old, Ja’mie; and Mr. G, the showoff drama teacher.

The series, which became a hit last year in Australia, follows the “documentary” framework of “The Office”: Subjects discuss themselves for the camera, then are soon contradicted when the camera catches them in “candid” behavior. Self-delusion is epidemic at this school, where Mr. G reckons he’s an inspirational figure, however narcissistic his song-and-dance demonstrations, and where even Ja’mie’s tossed-off pleasantries betray her meanness (“Oh, you’ve got wheelchair people! That’s so cute!”).

To play Ja’mie, who arrives as an exchange student from her posh private girls school, “I knew I wanted there to be a contrast between this girl who everyone thinks is wonderful and amazing but who’s really nasty and selfish,” Lilley said.

Lilley created Mr. G during a stint as a stand-up comic. Now the character is in full flower as a small-time spectacle of oversized ego who composes a song for the student musical celebrating his own presumed virtuosity: “My name is Mr. G/Three talents one, two, three! Singing and dancing/ And acting is my life!”

Lilley as Ja'mie

OTHER ACTS

Chris Lilley played five characters on his 2005 series, “We Can Be Heroes: Finding the Australian of the Year.”

To flesh out the characters, Lilley spent months embedded in numerous Aussie schools, gathering material and soaking up the atmosphere.

“I wanted to make sure I was very current. I didn’t want the show to be an old person’s perspective,” said Lilley, 34. “You have ideas that you just want to confirm. You write a scene about a staff meeting, but you want to sit in on a staff meeting, and make sure all the details are right.”

Lilley doesn’t use much makeup or other tricks to play his characters, but he did have to redecorate the shooting location, Brighton Secondary College in suburban Melbourne.

“It’s a quite nice-looking place,” he said, “but I was very keen to make it appear that it was a lower-income school. So we made it look quite ugly.”

Classes were in session during the three-month shoot, with Brighton students in non-speaking parts.

At first, Ja’mie raised eyebrows in the hallways.

“We got a few funny looks: ‘What is the tranny doing in our school?’”

How you can turn a turbulent stock market into massive profits

"I've made money in every kind of market — up, down, and sideways. Let me show you exactly how to do it in today's volatile market."

George Fontanills, founder of Optionetics, is a Harvard-educated, internationally renowned best-selling author, money manager, and options trading expert.

You see the market reports every day. One day the market is up 100, 300, 500 points. The next day, the market's down 700 points. Most investors think you can't make money in markets like this. But I do it every day, and I can show you how.

THE SECRET IS OPTIONS

Let's face it. For most people, buying a stock is a one-way street. They buy and hold the stock, hoping it will go up. But the smart investors know there's a much better way to profit in the market. In fact, they love the massive volatility of today's market because that's where the massive profits are made.

ELECTION YEAR VOLATILITY WORKS IN YOUR FAVOR

Election year jitters. Housing collapse. Fuel. Bailouts. Bring it on. The more, the better! Today's volatility creates opportunities for big profits. My time-tested, award-winning program teaches you how to profit in markets just like this.

IT'S ALL ABOUT LEVERAGE

For every $1,000 you put in stocks, options investors only put in $150 – $200 to achieve the same investment muscle. How? Because we use options to leverage or control a stock rather than buy it, extending the power of your investment dollar. That's how I play the stock market, without the risk of actually buying the stock.

Walnuts pack a healthy punch

Cox News Service

Want to eat more healthfully? Add nuts to your diet.

Sure, nuts are rich in fats. That's how they make peanut butter and peanut oil, for instance. But the oils in nuts—monounsaturated and polyunsaturated (the same kind as in olive oil and canola oil)—are the “good fats” associated with reduced risk of heart disease. They are low in saturated fats and contain no trans fats and no cholesterol.

Walnuts are an especially healthful choice. They're on the list of nuts that qualify for a Food and Drug Administration health claim that eating 1.5 ounces of nuts a day may reduce the risk of heart disease. And even though nuts are a pretty concentrated source of calories—about 160 to 200 calories an ounce—the kind of oil in nuts, like olive oil and canola oil, is rich in heart-healthy fats.

Nuts' image as being fattening is fading too. Weight-control research shows nuts, which also are good sources of fiber and protein, can help people diet because just a little adds a lot of satiety to meals and snacks.

All nuts have their own specific nutrition story to tell. Walnuts, compared to other nuts, have the highest levels of plant-based omega-3 fatty acids and are among the highest in disease-fighting antioxidant levels. They even beat out a glass of red wine in content of phenol, which is one of the most potent antioxidants.

LOS ANGELES TIMES FILE

NUTRITION NOTES

>> Nuts, depending on the variety, contain all kinds of important nutrients, including B vitamins, protein and fiber. Walnuts are high in plant-based omega-3 fatty acids. Almonds are a particularly good source of vitamin E, and peanuts are a good source of folate. Cashews provide copper, and hazelnuts offer manganese, both important micronutrients.

>> The protein in nuts puts them in the “meat” category of the USDA MyPyramid diet guidelines. According to the USDA, a half-ounce of nuts is equal to 1 ounce of meat in meal planning.

>> Studies suggest that eating 1.5 ounces per day of most nuts as part of a diet low in saturated fat and cholesterol and not increasing overall caloric intake may reduce the risk of heart disease. But it's interesting to note that does not apply to Brazil nuts, macadamias and cashews, which are higher in saturated fats than other nuts.

>> Important nut note: About 1 percent of the population is allergic to nuts. Symptoms range from mild to life-threatening, so depending on severity there are different levels of precautions to take. Always ask the server if nuts are used in recipes and if dishes can be made totally nut-free.

Up-and-comer working with A-list actors

Daniel Craig. Hilary Swank. Johnny Depp.

These are just a few of the big names that young Mia Wasikowska is (or soon will be) working with in Hollywood these days.

So who the heck is she?

The Australian actress is, quite simply, a person whose name you might want to remember. (We know it's hard, but try.)

She's playing Alice opposite Depp in the much-talked-about "Alice in Wonderland" update, and she worked with Craig in "Defiance," a World War II film getting early Oscar buzz. Oh, and she also has a role in the upcoming biopic "Amelia," in which Swank plays Amelia Earhart. Plus, she tore it up the first season of HBO's "In Treatment."

Not bad for someone who hasn't hit 20 yet.

Because we're all about getting the early scoop, RedEye decided this would be the ideal time to investigate a possibly rising star.

L.A. DAILY NEWS CONTRIBUTED.

What we know

She's modest

"It's very different from [the world] I know from growing up," she says of her sudden movie-star life. "It's something new and, yeah, it's definitely an experience. It's a lot of fun and something I never really expected. It's great."

She's down with Johnny Depp and filming "Alice"

"It's going really well; it's a lot of fun," she says. "He's such a nice guy and makes it very easy for you to feel like the character. Basically, it's just fun every day."

She knows Disney

"You sort of grow up on those films no matter where you are. When I was in Poland [working], all the kids were watching the same films with subtitles and stuff like that. It's a big part of our culture, Disney films."

What we want to know

What does she think about Daniel Craig—or the new Bond movie?

Surely Wasikowska crossed paths with the "Quantum of Solace" star while filming "Defiance," a film about three brothers who escape Nazi-occupied Poland. Did they talk? What did she think?

Has she ever considered a stage name?

Not that there's anything wrong with Wasikowska. Just sayin' it's a tongue-twister.

How do you go from working on a TV show in 2004 to rubbing elbows with Hollywood bigwigs only four years later?

Seriously, how do you do that? We need that gig.

Tying the knot—but not with Hef

Good-bye, Hugh Hefner; hello, Hank Baskett.

“Girls Next Door” star Kendra Wilkinson is engaged to the Philadelphia Eagles wide receiver, her ex Hefner tells usmagazine.com.

“Kendra Wilkinson has met someone who she would like to spend the rest of her life with,” the Playboy magnate says. “He popped the question last Saturday.

So is Hef cool with all this?

“I have given her my blessing and will be giving her away at a very special wedding ceremony at the Playboy Mansion this coming June,” he says.

‘Hills’ guy in hot water

Looks like Jason Wahler is in trouble. A jury says the former “Laguna Beach” personality and occasional “Hills” character owes a tow truck driver $5,000 in damages for a confrontation more than two years ago, The Associated Press reports. The driver said Wahler punched him in the face and hurled racial slurs at him and other blacks during a fight in September 2006.

‘Not a victim’

Christina Applegate doesn’t want you to feel sorry for her. The breast cancer survivor says fighting the disease is tough—but she’s not looking for pity. “Yes, it’s hard. It sucks,” the “Samantha Who?” actress tells TV Guide in a new interview, according to usmagazine.com excerpts. “But I’m not a victim.”

IN

Child labor?

Miley Cyrus tells Tyra Banks her first job was cleaning toilets—at age 11.

OUT

Classy descriptions of pregnancy

“I’m a beached whale!” Rebecca Romijn tells Page Six magazine about expecting twins.

WHATEVER

Jada Pinkett Smith

She’s happy with voicing a rotund character in “Madagascar 2,” she tells AP: “I’ve always wanted more body. So I got to play a hippo.”

Emergency situation

Is George Clooney coming back to the Windy City? The former "E.R." heartthrob just might show up in the May finale of the show based in Chicago, according to former co-star Noah Wyle.

"From what I heard, George said, 'absolutely,' schedule permitting," Wyle tells TV Guide, according to E!

News excerpts.

A rep for Clooney wouldn't comment other than to say, "This story is not confirmed." So we'll just have to wait and see then.

'B' is for Barack

Barack Obama, Beyonce wants to sing at your inauguration.

"I'm there.

I can't wait.

I feel like all of us, we're ready to do whatever we have to do.

Whatever they want — if they need me to volunteer, they need me to sing, I'm there, and I'm ready," she tells The Associated Press.

Beyonce said she watched the election returns in her home after postponing a trip to Japan to promote her new album. "I said ...

I have to go home, I'm gonna kill myself if I'm not home in America."

Wanting more 'Sex'

Could it possibly be true?

"Sex and the City" star Kim Cattrall, a.k.a. Samantha Jones, says there could be a sequel to this year's film.

Cattrall

"We wanted to the first time, and now we're hopefully doing it again for the second time," Cattrall told a U.K. radio station, according to a BBC news report out Thursday.

She said it was "difficult getting everybody who's so incredibly busy all together at the same time."

Stay tuned.

'Office' gossip

Tuesday's election made Ed Helms a little nostalgic for his days as a correspondent on "The Daily Show," but the actor isn't eager to quit "The Office."

Helms

"I feel so lucky to be part of 'The Office,' and it's so fun consistently," Helms told reporters during a conference call Thursday. "I loved being in the fake news business, but it was so taxing to do those interviews."

LiLo pal gets political

Lindsay Lohan's pal Samantha Ronson was one of many celebrities to speak Wednesday about the California proposition that reverses a ruling to allow same-sex marriage in the state.

"I guess people care more about farm animals than they do their fellow man, that's really sad to me," Ronson said, referring to California's passing of an animal-rights proposition and also Proposition 8, the one overturning the gay-marriage ruling.

"I am glad that the chickens will have more room and better conditions as they wait to die, but I just think it's frightening that people show more compassion for tomorrow's dinner than for the chef."
